

One year after the death of her husband, Mrs. Dubé and her children sang hymns in an open-air meeting and testified of their faith. Suddenly, a movement in the crowd: a young man stepped forward and, bowing his head, murmured, "I want to begin a new life with Jesus, my Savior." Madame Dubé recognized him: wasn't this the young man one of the murderers of her husband? After a moment of hesitation, she took a step towards him and held out her hand: "Now," she said to him, "you have become my brother."

Jean-Louis Gaillard

Benjamin Dubé, missionary in South Africa, encouraged Blacks and Whites to understand each other and to love one another. But his message was badly received

...he ran to the house and announced the terrible news to his mother. After which he entered his room, knelt down and opened his Bible.

One evening when he was going with his youngest of his children to a meeting where he was to preach the gospel, ten men stopped his car, took it out, and stabbed him many times.

The first words on which he said were those of Jesus on the cross: "Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they do" (Luke 23. 34).

The boy managed to hide behind a trash can until the murderers left and, finding that his father was dead,

A little later, the murderers were arrested and sentenced to more or less long prison terms.
